

2017 A Year to Remember!

2017 was a year to remember! I did more travelling this year than I did in each of the last 8. We were constantly breaking new trails to places we had never been before, and seeing people healed, changed and set free.

As 2017 came to an end, Desert Stream (my home church) and Broken Walls were able to bless 14 families in Pikangikum with gift boxes filled with loads of quality, hand-picked items sent with lots of love.

In 2018, my expectation for change in our First Nations' communities across North America is at at all-time high. I'm seeing more and more people willing to challenge their old way of thinking and who want to see justice prevail. Many lives are still in jeopardy and our First Nations' communities are in need of true love and honest relationships.

One of our goals is to raise up people who will change their preconceived notions and listen to the voices of the First People before forming an opinion and launching in. The SPIRITUAL battle must be fought first to open the door for the great change that IS coming. 2018 needs to be a year when we determine in our hearts to see hope released and value restored in the First People.

Canada and America, as we continue to Go, please pray for your Native People! Pray that the deep healing and restoration that only comes through Jesus will reach our communities across this great land. Pray that the pain and suffering that is still a part of daily life will become a thing of the past. PRAY that TRUST will be restored, HOPE will become embraced, and LIFE will be cherished.

I want to thank all of you who cover Broken Walls and our families with your prayers, love and finances. Without you, our work couldn't happen. I pray that 2018 will be a year of prosperity and harvest for you, and that the love of Jesus will continue to grow in your hearts. May His peace be with you and yours for a blessed and Happy New Year!
